

ABOVE AND LEFT: The second stage of the foundation slab for the new Roxby Police Station was poured and finished off in the early hours of last Thursday morning.

Pictures by Annarien Robbertse

Cop shop on target

By Millie Thomas

The anticipated completion of the new Roxby Downs police station is drawing nearer and apart from the disappearance of the BMX track locals have not had much indication of what to expect.

Candetti, who won the contract, is in the process of building other monumental structures around South Australia. These include the $100 million state of the art Marion swimming complex, as well as a police station complex at Christie's Beach. They have won prestigious awards for the Port Augusta Police complex contract from the Royal Australian Institute of Architects.

Candetti is working closely with architectural group Greenway Architects, as well as contracting companies from Adelaide and local Roxby Downs contractors Integralign and Biancos.

Integralign is providing the man power during the first stage, earth works and civil works.

The project, which is estimated to be finished in September of this year at a cost of around $10 million, will accommodate approximately 36 policemen, including a forensic department. The building includes forensic labs and testing areas, cells, a courthouse, numerous offices as well as an administrative area, police training area and secure parking for police patrol vehicles, clients, including disabled parking and access.

As far as the earthworks and civil works are concerned, Integralign has paved the way for success in future construction and development for this modern facility, with

